PRESS RELEASE

Ridgeback release Camper Crossover service body

Melbourne, April 9th, 2015:

Ridgeback service bodies have released a dual purpose camper and service body in one. The 'CX 2400 Camper Crossover ' model is designed to work as a fully functional service body for work during the week and then convert into a camper for weekends.

Andrew Pickering, Ridgeback Director, states 'We have used our specialist knowledge from our Pioneer off road campers and applied this to develop the CX crossover with our Ridgeback product'. Andrew explains the main reason for developing this product was that for many years we have had tradesmen ask about a service body that could be used as a camper on weekends. 'Whilst there are challenges and a few compromises, we believe we have developed the perfect solution' states Andrew

The CX 2400 is a lift off/removable type body and is clamped to the Aluminium or steel tray of the vehicle with the Ridgeback clamping system and Lifting jacks rated at 1000kg each are all included as standard

The CX 2400 is ideal for tradesman working in remote locations as the CX 2400 provides a home away from home. The camper function has a queen size bed with full zip style canvas and mesh enclosure that operates whilst the side doors are open. There are six sliding draws for camping essentials, a large rear trundle draw for long and/or flat items.

When using as a service body work vehicle the six sliding draws can be used for tools and items, a large open section for storage of larger items and tools and ladder racks.. Switching from Camper mode to service body mode is as simple as unzipping the canvas and mesh enclosure and removing the mattress and camping items. Replacing with all of your work tools and equipment and you are ready for work
